Union for Democratic Communication
(Last Update: 10/16/2023)

Preamble

The Union for Democratic Communications is an organization that seeks to promote progressive systems that advance the broadest collective participation in the decisions that affect our lives. It is only through such democratic communication structures that we can overcome cultural hegemony and contribute to building a world based on economic justice, equality, and peace. To do this, We must confront and challenge dominant power structures and the ideological systems that support class-controlled communication. The characteristic of our media today is that they are overwhelmingly owned or controlled by the capitalist class. Consequently, communication products and services have become commodities that are used for the accumulation of profit and for the ideological system based on private ownership and production for profit. Similarly, we reject a media system that functions for the benefit of bureaucratic elites. As an alternative, we seek a media system that is popularly owned and democratically operated, although we recognize that there are many specific options within that broad principle. Reform that leaves untouched, and perpetuates, the present structure of class ownership and cultural relations can be only a temporary expedient. As such, it in no way addresses itself to basic institutional and cultural problems. The goals and work of this Union are especially urgent because monopoly control over the means of communication promotes cultural hegemony and the concentration of wealth and power, while increasing the danger of global destruction by military means.

1. Article I: Name

The name of this organization shall be the Union for Democratic Communications

2. Article II: Purposes

The purposes of this-organization shall be:

2.1. To encourage the development of critical communication theory and to promote a political economic analysis of communication. its class basis, audits role in society.

2.2. To direct attention to the interrelation of politics. economics, science and communication technologies; including the apportionment and uses of the electromagnetic spectrum. This requires the study not only of ways by which communication systems strengthen the present structure of power. but also of how powerless peoples can confront and reverse this condition.

2.3. To support critical communication research activities' and to struggle for the creation and maintenance of alternative forms of popular communication and culture that are basic for political and economic democracy.

2.4. To bring together political communication theory and practice and to overcome artificial divisions among communication producers and researchers that have emerged from, and have been cultivated by class domination

2.5. To work with other progressive organizations toward action strategies in order to achieve collective participation in public forums.

2.6. To join others around the world in applying critical theory and research to the struggles of oppressed peoples for cultural autonomy and democratic control of communication and information resources.
